COMPLEX AND CLASS ACTIONS

Complex litigation involves civil lawsuits that often include multiple parties with claims across multiple jurisdictions.

These cases can take years to resolve, with alleged damages sometimes reaching into millions of dollars. Cases that fall under the category of complex litigation include class action lawsuits, anti-trust cases, and mass torts. Complex litigation may involve large numbers of witnesses, thousands of pages of documents, and extensive pre-trial discovery. The management of complex actions requires considerable legal skill, organization, and experience.

Critchfield's litigators are experienced in the management of complex and class action lawsuits. Our attorneys have the requisite knowledge to manage complex litigation while continuing to serve their clients as capable advisors and able advocates. They will provide an honest assessment of each case, including whether or not settling out of court, rather than taking a case to trial, is the better option.
