

Litigation

PRODUCT LIABILITY

In a product liability case, a consumer that has been injured by a product may seek compensation from one or more parties in a distribution chain, including manufacturers, distributors, suppliers, and even retailers.

Claims in product injury cases are based on defective design, defective manufacture, or in the instruction or warnings related to the use of the product or because the product failed to conform to some representation made by the manufacturer.

The product liability lawyers at Critchfield are highly experienced in product liability law and have defended clients in a broad range of industries, including pharmaceuticals, medical device manufacturers, motor vehicle and aviation manufacturers, information processing companies, and manufacturers of chemicals, windows, bicycles and computer equipment.

We offer experienced and aggressive counsel to clients on a regional, statewide and national basis in both state and federal courts.